Chapter 2

New Chapter with a Long Title that Spanns over More Than One Line

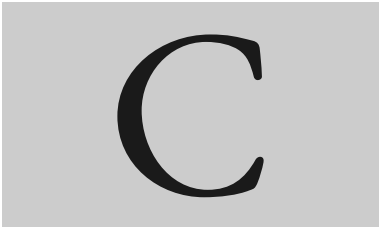

Figure 2.2: This figure can have a long caption and still fit if done this way. Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet, consectetur adipiscing elit, sed do.

Above Figure 2.1 is next to Figure 2.2. By using the `#flexCaption(long caption, short caption)` function you can make flexible captions. You can also make longer/shorter headings! See Chapter 2.

A word on Typst referencing

In References you can find links. [2] provides a guide for past LaTeX users on the differences between the two typesetting languages, including what's native or not native, which macros map to which function etc. [3] and [4] links to information on how to cite and reference different sources. Typst includes support for both its native YAML-based format and BibTeX. [5] gives a link to the Typst Universe. On this page you can find packages which aid in your workflow, both in terms of styling and automation. For example Figure 1.1 was made using lilaq, a package used to make graphs inside the Typst environment. Another good package is Zap which is used to make circuit diagrams much like TikZ. [6]

For documentation on all functions, markup- and styling commands, see [7].
